Category:2016 video games Category:2016 video gamesQ: unix scripting, looping through files, find and copy I have a large number of .tff files in my current directory and I am trying to do two things. 1) The files I want to match are called username and I need to loop through these to find the file in this format: /home/username/servers/general/netboot The files I want to compare with are also called username. 2) Once I have the file, I need to find and replace any character in that file with * and then send it to a new file with that newly created file name. I have gotten to part of the first part where I am able to loop through all of the files, but not sure how to create a loop that does the find replace on any particular file. I have a few solutions that are giving me errors, could someone point me in the right direction? for file in $("/home/username/servers/general/netboot/*"); do find "$file" -type f -exec cat -n '{}' \; | grep -c "$(cat -n) done if [ $? -eq 1 ]; then for file in $("/home/username/servers/general/netboot/*"); do find "$file" -type f -exec sed -i's/$^/g' '{}' \; done fi A: for file in $("/home/username/servers/general/netboot/*"); This will loop over the paths and not files. The correct way to do this in Bash is for file in "/home/username/servers/general/netboot/*" But if you can use grep, it will do the same as Bash: grep -E --color
