WARNING: Demanding documents and slides will spoil your first impression. Your first impression, on a resume, is the most important and relevant impression you can make. People will only give you a fraction of a second to really look at your resume. Make it count. Make sure you write, in your own words, what you are interested in doing and what it is that you have done. Do not copy and paste skills lists from other resumes, or skills lists from other resumes you have seen. The recruiter has better things to do than to go through each resume and explain that you have a particular skill. They know that. So write your own.
