The issue is that when I change the values, the current transformation remains the same, and I am not able to see the modified result on the svg. I think that the transformation just doesn't get applied until the next tick() call. How can I modify the current transformation values and see the result on the svg? One last thing, if it is not clear, my aim is to modify the projection when the svg is rotated. Here is a fiddle with a simplified example of the issue. I also tried the same example but with the new Transition() function introduced in d3 4, but I get the same result. Any help would be appreciated. A: In your code you have: var t = d3.transition(); But then you replace it with: t = d3.transition(); In your code, you just replace t with the same t. So there is no difference between your first and the second. To
