The aim of this study was to localize and to characterize the efferent fibres from the brainstem and cortex that project to cells in laminae VII and VIII of the rat spinal cord. The study was conducted in 60 adult rats, in which retrograde tracers were applied to the medial wall of the lateral ventricle of the brain. Tracer injections were confined to one of the following areas: (1) anterior, dorsolateral or posterior cortical areas; (2) dorsal, intermediate or ventral brainstem nuclei; and (3) the cortex and dorsal brainstem nuclei. At various survival times after the tracer injection, labelled cells were examined for neurochemical characteristics (neuronal nitric oxide synthase, parvalbumin, calbindin and choline acetyltransferase) and compared with cells of the same laminae that were not labelled. We observed that ventricular injections of a small amount of tracer resulted in widespread labelling of cells, mainly in the laminae VII and VIII, and that cortical injections resulted in the labelling of cells in laminae VII, VIII and IX. In contrast, injections of the dorsal medulla, i.e. the caudal dorsal and the ventral quadrigeminal nuclei, resulted in labelling of cells mainly in the laminae VII and VIII. Similar results were obtained by injection into the ventral brainstem i.e. the ret
