25608 Republicans in the House are planning to introduce a resolution to
denounce a move by the Democratic-controlled Senate to restore earmarks to
the country's budget,
according to a GOP
leadership aide. The
aide would not reveal
the actual wording of the resolution, but rather said it will be introduced Tuesday or

ADVERTISEMENT
But Republican lawmakers are eager to attach it to bills on the floor this week. It will serve as a floor amendment — which are allowed to be attached to bills without an accompanying measure — or it can serve as a resolution, which is allowed to be attached to a debate on another bill. The resolution will also serve as an amendment to a bill to prevent an increase in the debt ceiling, according to the aide. “We’re hoping to get this put on a bill that’s either pending or coming out tomorrow or Wednesday,” the aide told The Hill, explaining that the timing of the resolution's introduction is a "work in progress." A GOP aide told The Hill that the Senate Republicans' efforts to put earmarks back in the legislative process is a "a grass-roots effort by the members who will run for the Congress next year." The aide said "there's not really much to this" resolution, but that it is "making the case that we as Republicans have always had earmarks.” Earmarks are annual appropriations packages that are directed to specific projects in federal agencies. Democrats have long opposed earmarks, while Republicans tend to support them. The filibuster-proof, 60-vote Senate requires a vote of 60 senators to approve an earmark. Last year, several Republican senators with presidential aspirations were among those who opposed President Obama's proposal to limit earmarks, complaining that they were difficult to control and resulted in pork projects in their districts. The Republican National Committee also weighed in on

---
