Is it a race to be the next "Build a web app in X days" contest? I'm not sure...===== pizza The idea that you can judge a company in 3-4 days vs. years is apples and oranges. --- xoxo That's actually what I was talking about. It's a good metric for judging a company. I think there's been a lot of push for this over the years and programmers have become jaded. The feeling is that it's a race to the bottom as far as actual value. If you miss an ad or your site doesn't load one second of the time, so what? That's a pretty shitty product. If you do something that impacts your users enough to make it #1 on the list of popular search terms, so what? That's a pretty shitty product. EDIT: Yeah, I think that's what's happened. I've gotten a lot of flack for this, so I'm going to do a 24hr challenge as well. I'll end my challenge on Xmas eve and let you know the results then. ----- GFK_of_xmaspast Because once upon a time the whole idea that '60k of code runs a business' was
