Thursday, December 19, 2007 A new report from McKinsey and Co. explores the continued evolution of the turbine business and outlines the predicted shape of the wind industry in the next decade. As you can see in the table below, McKinsey forecasts that there will be 4.5 million turbines installed globally by the end of 2025, up from 1.1 million today. "China will be the largest market for wind, with an estimated generation capacity of almost 6 gigawatts, followed by Europe and the United States," McKinsey says. The report sees the cost of turbines falling dramatically. By 2023, the cost will be $1.05/watt, up from $0.39/watt today. This cheaper cost per watt will be achieved, in part, because of significant decreases in the cost of components such as rotor blades, vertical-axis wind turbines (VAWTs), and the gearbox. The report sees traditional turbine industries, such as the nac f30f4ceada
