code of a file with that of an existing file. It is also used to find the differences between your own code and that of someone else's. But Diff's major strength lies in the fact that it can also understand and display complex text and binary differences – something that other comparison programs can't do. If you download or create any kind of batch files, VBScripts and scripts, or any other types of files and you wish to preserve or change their content, you can use a utility to do just that.

Diff's features include: Text comparison Line based comparison with highlighting differences Output to text files with line numbers, line delimiters, highlighting and end of line comments Functions and end of line comments

Association of Major Histo-compatibility Complex Class I Alleles with the Clinical Phenotype of Severe Hand-Foot-Mouth Disease in Northeast Thailand. Severe hand-foot-mouth disease (HFMD) is a life-threatening infectious disease caused by a group of enteroviruses. Genetic predisposition may contribute to the clinical phenotypes of HFMD, and previous studies suggest that HLA class I genes may be associated with the disease susceptibility. We genotyped HLA class I alleles in 50 patients with severe HFMD in northeast Thailand to investigate their contribution to the risk of severe HFMD. There was no significantly increased risk of severe HFMD in the HLA-B*54 or HLA-B*58 alleles. However, the HLA-B*51 allele was significantly associated with severe HFMD [odds ratio (OR)=4.35, 95% confidence interval (CI)=1.25-15.19, P=0.02]. Haplotype frequencies showed that HLA-B*51/B*58 was significantly associated with the occurrence of severe HFMD (OR=3.40, 95% CI=1.12-10.16, P=0.03). Our study
