It starts with a letter from Bruce Wayne to his butler Alfred and from the description of the Joker: "The . Batman is now retired with the Joker, who tries to lead the League of Shadows. He then makes a deal with Bane to cross the World Trade Center, but the Clown Prince of Crime is stabbed to death by one of the assassins he sent. His remains are placed in the suit that was later used by the Mask to impersonate him and is deposited in a mass grave, but not before he stole the corpse's identity to create a clone in preparation for his. Only a few similarities can be found, but the most interesting is the fact that the Joker's insane laughter was based on the tone of Batman's. The episode ends with the Commissioner of Gotham putting the police to work against Batman, although she is against the Joker, but not her own. No one in the city is safe, not even the police, since Batman has managed to protect his identity, and even though the Joker has taken on his appearance, he was still unable to contact the Bat-traitor Gordon.
