He was a god of fertility and war, and was the eldest brother of Chinggis Khan. Poshthang's name means "sharp-tempered." The birth of Poshthang is often said to be during a feast of the horses of the Khan. According to the story, the Khan's horse, named Chalbaatar, was annoyed by the noise of people eating, and kicked him into the air, separating him from the body of his mother. Poshthang was eventually found by a gos, who renamed him "Horo Hoshan" (Horo "war" + Hoshan "shiny"; later, this term was often used to refer to the four young brothers of the Khan). Poshthang was the eldest of the five sons of Khutulun, a princess of the Mongol Golden Clan (Tümen Noyan Khutulun). He and his brothers are collectively known as the Horo Hoshang. He was the grandson of King Utian, a descendant of Genghis Khan's brother, Chinggis Khan. His parents were Koichir, the mother of the Khutuls, and Khutulun. Poshthang was also the brother of Chinggis Khan's other sons. Etymology In the modern Mongolian language, the word means "sharp-
