present invention relates to an electromagnetic fuel injection valve for internal combustion engines, and more particularly to an electromagnetic fuel injection valve which has a core mounted in a press-fit manner. A conventional electromagnetic fuel injection valve is structured by: a yoke in a hollow cylindrical form and a press-fit core engaged with the hollow cylindrical yoke; an electromagnetic coil wound on an end of the yoke, the press-fit core, and a fuel passage provided in the yoke. In an electromagnetic fuel injection valve, the press-fit core is provided with a fuel passage. For this reason, the residual stress is generated in the press-fit core due to the press-fit deformation, thereby possibly causing a spring-back. Accordingly, it is an object of the present invention to provide an electromagnetic fuel injection valve which overcomes the above problems encountered in the conventional techniques. It is another object of the present invention to provide an electromagnetic fuel injection valve which can prevent the spring-back of the press-fit core.

According to an aspect of the present invention, there is provided a fuel injection valve having a fuel passage provided in a press-fit core which is press-fit in a hollow cylindrical yoke; wherein a surface of the press-fit core is covered with a resin. According to another aspect of the present invention, there is provided a fuel injection valve having a fuel passage provided in a press-fit core which is press-fit in a hollow cylindrical yoke; wherein the press-fit core is molded as an integral structure by the resin. According to a further aspect of the present invention, there is provided a fuel injection valve having a fuel passage provided in a press-fit core which is press-fit in a hollow cylindrical yoke; wherein an end portion of the press-fit core is covered with a resin. The details as well as other features and advantages of the present invention are set forth in the remainder of the specification and are shown in the accompanying drawings. Teg
