* Mac OS Windows (see the sidebar, "Are you using Photoshop? The answer may surprise you.") Back in the 'MacQuilley's Classic fine art and photography magazine days, I was the Mac editorial director and an original contributor to a team of folks (Mac, Windows, Linux, and iPhone) who produced the magazine. Now I do the same thing here, but we have a very small staff — not large enough to hire a real magazine staff.

This invention relates to a process of preparing a novel high-concentration, stable, highly alkaline, metal soap in which the major constituent of the resulting liquid phase is a dispersion of particles of sodium carboxylates and/or carbonates. Although various processes for preparing highly concentrated, metal carboxylate solutions by neutralization of fatty acids are known, they cannot provide as high a concentration of metal salt as is possible by the process of the present invention. In one such prior art process, as described in Australian patent application No. 3764/68-Faraday, metal salts of fatty acids such as calcium, magnesium, and barium carboxylates are dissolved in water and converted to metal soaps by treatment with alkali metal hydroxides. The water is evaporated from the resulting solution and the residue is heated to decompose the metal soap and the free fatty acid. The above process suffers from the disadvantage that the carboxylate salt is not sufficiently stable at elevated temperatures and decomposition to the free carboxylate occurs even at relatively low temperatures. Another disadvantage of the process of application No. 3764/68-Faraday is that the metal ions may not be completely decarboxylated because of the further reduction to carbon dioxide and water which occurs when heated to decomposition temperatures. In another known process, as described in Journal of the Chemical Society, September, 1967, pp. 2180-2187, a mixture of alkali metal carboxylates and fatty acid is treated with a polyalkylenepolyamine to increase the alkalinity of the mixture. The polyalkylenepolyamine may be in the form of polyethyleneimine or polylysine. The resulting solution is reacted with a liquid fatty acid to decompose the metal carboxylates and produce the free fatty acid, which is removed by evaporation. The polyalkylenepolyamine may also be reacted with an alkali metal carbonate. In the above paper, there is a discussion of the stability of the product prepared using each of these reaction mixtures. However, the above mentioned paper cites no examples of the performance of either of the reactions referred to therein. Furthermore, the paper does not discuss the importance of speed in the reaction. In the present invention, the carboxylate ions are incompletely decarboxylated to form water and carbon dioxide, and carbon dioxide is removed from the solution by bubbling of

What's New In?

One fine morning, Rose woke up. One fine morning, she arose from her bed, and came to the window. She opened it, and looked down upon the pavement. She saw nothing there but the rain, which pattered noisily against the panes. "I do not like this window," thought Rose, "it is so small, and I am too big to get out of it!" She tried to close it, but it was fastened by a large iron bolt, and could not be moved. It had been bolted there to keep out the rain, as the little window, or trap-door, as it was called, was useless in such weather. "This will never do," said Rose to herself. "I do not like this room at all, with its bare walls and no pictures in them. I wish I were out of it. I will go back to my own dear nursery, and my dear bright, sunny little chamber. How nice and comfortable it will be! And yet, it was not so very nice to-day. To-day was rainy and dismal. No, it was not the weather that made me sad and unhappy; it was something else. My dear little window is too small for me to get through it. I will try to crawl up to the roof. At least I can do that. But it is such a dreadful way of going, and so high up! I will not do it, that is a thing one never does. But it will be a good opportunity to try a new kind of counting." And Rose commenced counting as fast as she could. "Three, four, five —" A something rapped three times at her door, and she was frightened, and said to herself, "Who can that be? I have no visitors in this world." But the knocking was repeated, and she said to herself, "I will open the door to-morrow; it is so late, and I am not ready to see anybody." She said this to herself, but really she was glad to hear the knock; she wanted to see who it was. She opened the door, and a little old woman stood before her, looking so bright and good, that Rose was quite pleased to see her. She was dressed in a black stuff gown, with a broad border round it, and a little pink shawl over her shoulders. She had on green
