Following a clinical case, we present the main pathological and diagnostic characteristics of equine lung hernias (ELH). These are defined as the presence of an elongated air-filled bulge in the lung. ELH is usually associated with pulmonary diseases. In horses a hernia at the right posterolateral lung tissue, associated with abscesses, can be observed frequently. Usually the hernia is defined as an extension of a cavitory lesion; it can also develop from a bronchitis and its cause is uncertain. Usually ELH can be diagnosed by ventral thoracic radiography, in addition to a lung abscess, and is treated by surgical closure and antibiotics.

Occasionally, a hernia can be managed conservatively with good prognosis. Vascular remodeling of left internal mammary artery after coronary artery bypass grafting in patients with hypertension.
