NEW YORK—In an effort to introduce members to the DICE Network, the Electronic Arts Community Management team held a popular session, “Meetup.com Roll Play: Introducing the DICE Network,” on Wednesday. In light of the recent expansion of the DICE Network to include 29 new team-based non-game competitions across a variety of games in addition to standard Competitive Play leagues, the session was held to help members get the most out of their DICE memberships. Joining the session were representatives from the Battlefield II Community Management, Battlefield 1, FIFA 14, Madden NFL 25, and Need for Speed teams, and the Community Management representatives unveiled new features of the DICE Network and offered members some ways they could become more involved. With the launch of the DICE Network, EA offers players the opportunity to compete in a wider variety of team-based games. In addition to Competitive Play leagues, DICE also offers Non-Game Amateur League for users in Europe, North America, and Oceania who are not eligible for the DICE League. The Community Management team also explained that, for the first time, players can earn championship points based on their performance in the DICE League, which is how they are eligible for prizes. The points are distributed to all competitive and non-competitive members of the DICE Network at the end of the season. The full session can be seen on EA’s YouTube page.
