The Photo Filter Module The Photo Filter module offers a collection of filters that you can apply to a selected layer in an image or to the entire image. At the left end of the Photo Filter tab, you will find an entry for Photo Filter that has a variety of filter samples that you can apply. Clicking and scrolling through these samples will present the filters to apply to an image. Let's explore the Photo Filter's list of samples, which are organized alphabetically by Filter and Filter preset, as shown in Figure 2-3. The Filters on a Layer (P) panel icon provides access to these samples. Figure 2-3: Use the Filter preset or create your own images with Photofiltre's set of filter samples. Photoshop includes a number of filter samples. Some of these filters are for retouching images and others are made for creative compositions. You can also create your own filter presets for specific image types. The Filters on a Layer (P) panel icon is the fastest way to access these filter presets. Click on the menu button, and the panel will scroll through the available filter samples, as shown in Figure 2-4. Figure 2-4: Photofiltre's Filter preset menu (P) panel icon provides access to a variety of filter samples. At the very top of the filter lists, you will see the Image Type icon. If you click on this icon, the top list of filters will change to include preset filters made just for that type of image. Select the Filter Type menu to see some of the available presets.

Q: Selecting individual displayed elements based on text content I'm trying to improve some older style websites into using HTML5 properly. One problem that I'm currently encountering is how to easily select a specific set of elements with unique text content. For example, this is a table in my code: Previous Next Foo Foo 2 ...and I want to target the two headers that currently have the class posts-list-item-title in this example, but have no direct text children. In this example, I would want to select Foo and Foo2. I tried the following: `.posts-list-item-title > a` ...which resulted in both Foo and Foo 2 being selected, as the words Foo and Foo 2 are direct child elements of `.posts-list-item-title`. I also tried this: `.posts-list-item-title:contains("Foo")` ...but that didn't work in my case. Is there a simple, elegant solution for selecting these particular elements? A: You need `: .posts-list-item-title:contains("Foo")` If you want to have it working in older IE you can use: `.posts-list-item-title.pseudo:contains("Foo")` Q: Condensing code in bash while loop I'm new to shell scripting and I'm having trouble writing a while loop that I thought would be relatively straight forward. I want to find all files in a directory whose names end in the string "world" and to iterate through them, display the file's name and part of the filename. I also want to add a counter to the loop; it displays filename[i] for each i,
